- Munday, Anthony and/or John Bodenham. Bel-vedére, or the Garden of the Muses. London: F.K. for Hugh Astley, 1600. This collection of similes and examples for ornamenting speeches is taken from material given to or performed before Elizabeth. Considering how well Munday knew Oxford, it is important for the Shakespeare authorship controversy that, in his prefatory material, Munday mentions both Shakespeare and Oxford among the book's sources--Oxford among the nobility, Shakespeare among the actors. This may mean either that Shakespeare and Oxford were separate persons--the obvious Stratfordian conclusion--or that, by 1600, it pleased Oxford that they should be considered so--the obvious Oxfordian conclusion. Rather more interestingly, it militates against the extreme Oxfordian position that Shakespeare was an illiterate lout; Munday and/or Bodenham do give him authorial credit for something. (Because of the format of Bel-vedére, it's not possible to determine which similes and examples belong to which author.)

- Munday, Anthony. Introductory poem to The Gorgeous Gallery of Gallant Inventions. 1578. The Gorgeous Gallery contains a version of “Pyramus and Thisbe” that is almost certainly one of Shakespeare’s sources: “In Babilon a stately seate, of high and mighty kings/Whose famous voice of ancient rule, through all the world yet rings:/Two great estates did whilom dwell: and places ioyned so,/As but one wall each princely place, divided other fro:...” Thisbe stabs herself underneath the “pap,” a word Shakespeare happily noted.
- Munday, Anthony. John a Kent and John a Cumber: A Comedy, printed from the original manuscript. Ed. John Payne Collier. London: for the Shakespeare Society, 1851. Includes A View of Sundry Examples, 1580; A Brief and True Report of the Execution of Certain Traitors at Tyburn, 1582; and An Advertisement and Defence for Truth against her Backbiters, 1581.
- [Munday, Anthony, translator?] The Mirror of Mutability, or principal part of the Mirror for Magistrates, describing the fall of divers famous Princes... London: John Alde and are to be sold by Richard Ballard, 1579. The dedication uses the phrase ‘stayless state’ and Munday writes a few phrases in rather journeyman Italian to Oxford.
- [Munday, Anthony and Edward de Vere?]. The Paine of Pleasure. Profitable to be perused of the wise, and necessary to be followed by the wanton. Reade with regard. Honos alit artes. Imprinted at London for Henrie Car, and are to be sold at his shop in Paules Churchyarde, next to the signe of the holy Lambe. 17. October 1580. I worked from the imperfect copy in the British Library, C.57.d.49(3.), together with the reproduced copy from the Pepysian Library, Cambridge (Pepysian Library No. 1434). The Harvard College Library also ascribes The Paine of Pleasure in part to Nicholas Breton; this might be the Post-with-a-Packet-of-Mad-Letters-like amatory correspondence at the end of the book.
